

IGN Movies point out a Tweet from @supererogatory (who reportedly has a record of being reliable when it comes to scoops such as this one) in which it is claimed that Monolith (developers of FEAR and Gotham City Imposters) are working on a tie-in for The Hobbit: An Unexpected Journey and The Hobbit: There and Back Again. There's obviously no other details available right now, but stay tuned for more as we have it. Are you looking forward to the planned video game? Sound off with your thoughts in the usual place. As to what Monolith/WB Games Seattle is up to now—pretty sure it is a little fantasy action RPG-lite called The Hobbit: Part One.— superannuation (@supererogatory) March 29, 2012 It also sounds like WB Seattle will be handling the tie-in for the second Hobbit film.— superannuation (@supererogatory) March 29, 2012

Read more: <http://www.comicbookmovie.com/fansites/JoshWildingNewsAndReviews/news/?a=57330>