

Deadline is reporting that Fox has placed an order for Patton Oswalt's new animated comedy series Working Class Hero. A show that, "set in a world where superheroing is just another low-paid government job and centers on a dad (Oswalt) whose powers are no match for his misfit superhero co-workers and his demanding family." While Fox has been dominating Sunday nights it is also apparent that the network solely relies on suckling from the creative teet of Seth MacFarlane, and Matt Groening. At some point The Simpsons and Family Guy will head off into the sunset, and you'd hate to see late night animated television disappear for good when that happens.
