

Let me start off by saying this: I know this is an article that can come off as very presumptuous, so I'll go ahead and give my "qualifications" to dissipate any tension that may follow. My name is Cameron Carpenter and after completing six screenplays, two plays, five failed web-series, and a novel, I am not published or professional. However, last year, I won an award for distinguished journalistic writing in state-wide college newspaper competition. I didn't enter my own piece, other members of the staff at the paper did it for me...without telling me. I don't consider myself an amateur by any means, but I have a lot to learn. These are a few things that I've learned so far that I'd like to share with you. And my hope is that you all will have additions as well.

1. Story Comes Before Agenda I have a friend, who is also

Read more: <http://www.comicbookmovie.com/fansites/TheScreenWork/news/?a=66228>