

"It's been really great. We've been shooting for a week and a half, and it's been an incredible return to that world." No surprise that Quinto was tightlipped on storylines, but he revealed that the cast didn't see the script until just a month before cameras started rolling. "It was the middle of December and finally I had to be like, 'We need to read the script'. They waited a pretty long time, but that's because they were working on it. There was a writer's strike the first time so they weren't able to let the script evolve. Now it's really changing... On a regular basis." Speaking about the new additions to the cast (Benedict Cumberbatch, Peter Weller and Alice Eve) he said, "All of them have folded in so beautifully and brought a whole new level of intelligence and sensitivity." Star Trek 2 is scheduled for a May 17, 2013 release date and stars the
