

In another interview for his new visually stunning movie 'Sucker Punch', Fred Topel of ScreenJunkies.com, like everyone else, has asked the upcoming Superman director about his plans for the upcoming flick. ScreenJunkies: It seemed like you'd done your comic book movies with 300 and Watchmen, but was Superman just too good to pass up? Snyder: Yeah, and in a lot of ways it's a different thing for me. It's a chance to do it for real. I think 300 and Watchmen are both particular in their graphic novels. I almost don't even see them as superhero movies. I see them as they're both novels. It's all about the story and the way the story exists as a work of literature. For me, Superman is a whole other thing. He's a character that we get to explore. I can make a movie that's not an indictment but really a celebration of the character. ScreenJunkies:
