

Tony Todd has played and voiced many villains over the years, with one of his most memorable performances coming during The Flash's second season. It was there that he took on the role of Zoom, but it has now been revealed that he came close to being Dormammu in the Marvel Cinematic Universe. Interestingly, though, it wasn't as simple as him being replaced by Benedict Cumberbatch. In a recent interview with Comic Book Resources, he revealed that he was brought in by producers to record all of the villain's lines but only as an alternative after Cumberbatch had already done so! Unfortunately, despite all that work, Marvel Studios ultimately decided to go with their first choice. "I have to tell you about one recent disappointment. I almost did Doctor Strange. I went in to do a session to play Dormammu. Benedict had already recorded it but the producers wanted another voice just as an alternative. We did a six-hour session and then two weeks

Read more: https://www.comicbookmovie.com/doctor_strange/zoom-voice-actor-from-the-flash-was-originally-cast-as-dormammu-in-a148540